

Your $25,000 Case Might Be Worth a Million

Traumatic brain injuries often go undiagnosed, making recoveries far lower than victims deserve. We make sure that doesn't happen.

A skillful lawyer can win a case – but was the right case won? In all too many accidents, a traumatic brain injury is tricky to diagnose - and often missed entirely.. That doesn't just mean your clients aren't getting the treatment they need. It means their case is undervalued. And fair compensation isn't going to happen.

The $25,000 case you have now might really be a $1 million case.

As experts in traumatic brain injury litigation, we don't just know how to try, and win, these cases – but how to recognize them when they happen. Over the past 35 years, we've obtained many significant recoveries in this area – success that has earned us a reputation among our peers; experience that has taught us what to look for, and ask about, and investigate, when a case is referred to us. We work with the right experts, and get the right diagnosis. So the right case is tried.

Little wonder, then, that our referral fees are often more than attorneys would recover on their own. Indeed, we've recovered more than $7 million over the past year alone for traumatic brain injuries.

Our founding partners, James W. Clark and Anthony T. Martino, are board-certified trial lawyers and are considered "specialists" by the Florida Bar. Together with a highly trained staff of attorneys, paralegals, nurses, and law clerks, they don't just uncover the truth of a case, but its true value, too.
